

This past weekend after returning from another tour of duty in Dayton Ohio I attended a weekend trip organized by Miss Kim up to Big Bear. It was an unofficial reunion of our backpacking class from a few months back.

Kim offered up her families cabin for the outing.

Saturday morning while waiting for the rest to arrive four of us started off the morning with a brisk hike. We explored a few unmarked trails and wandered up a few hills until we found a nice rock with a view.

We hung out a while looking out over the lake...

...and I perched on the edge.

After the others arrived we went looking for a landmark called Castle Rock. Being the brilliant masters of navigation we are we again shunned a mark trail in favor of exploration.

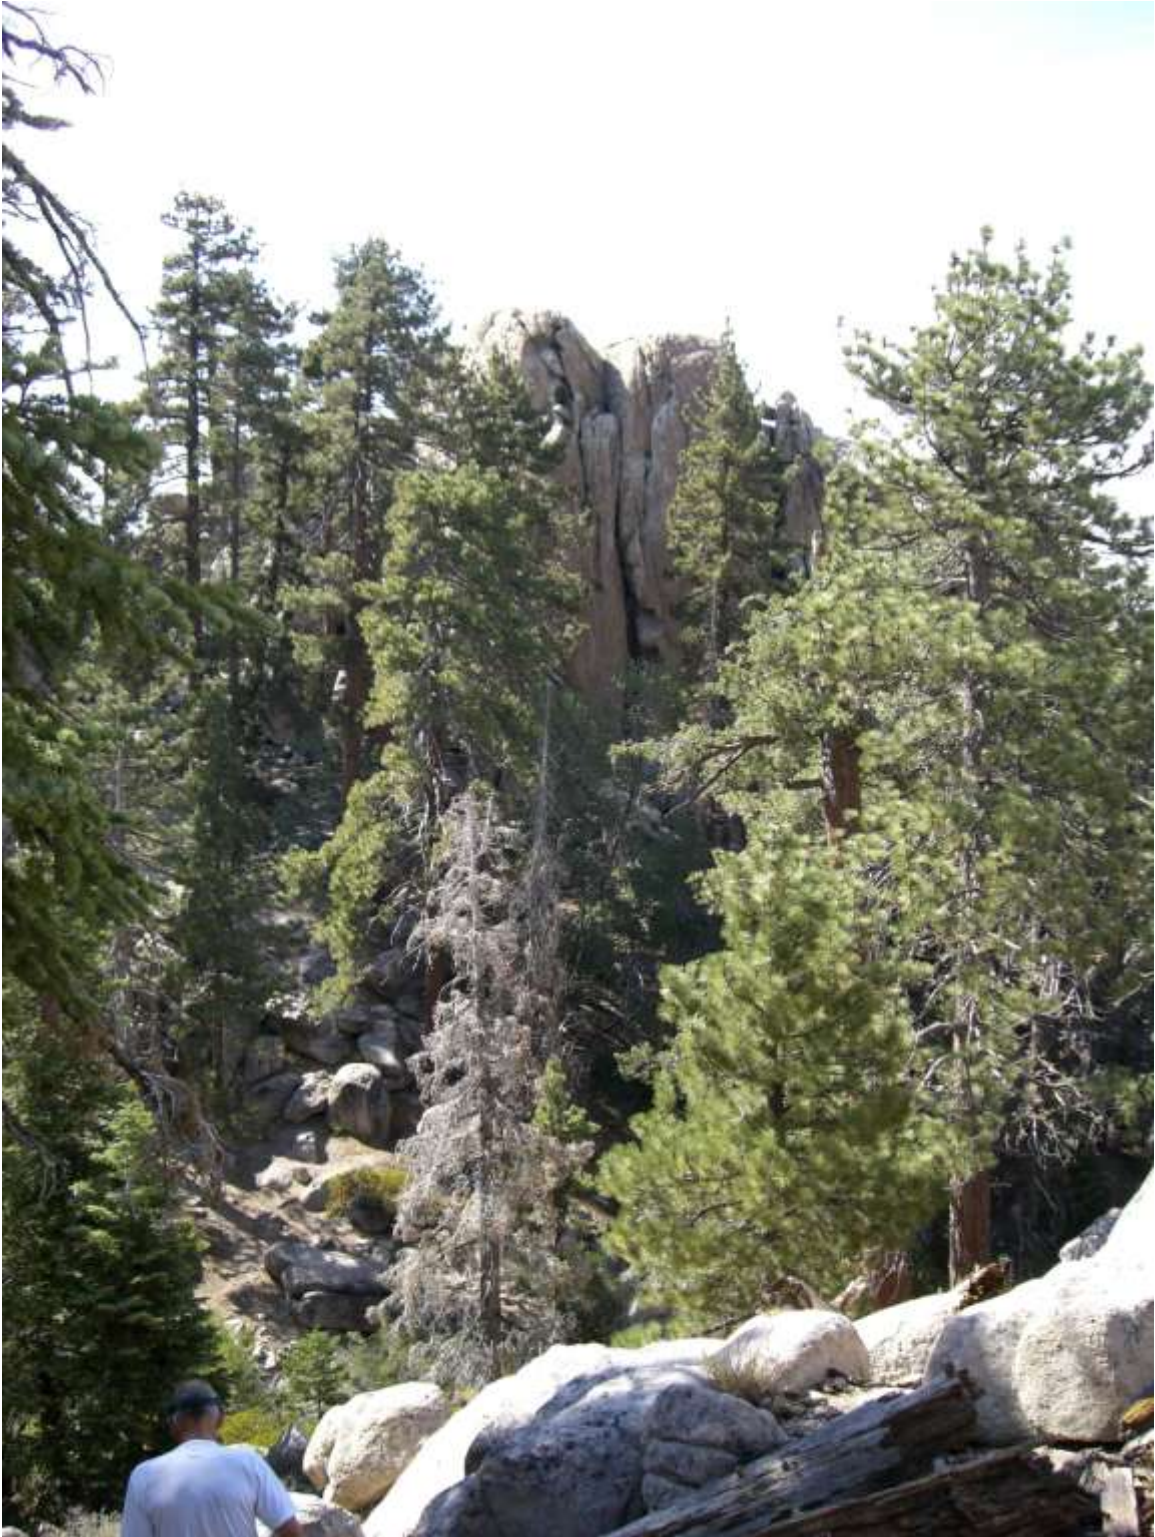

We took the scenic route. Several map checks later...

...and rocks that turned out not to be Castle Rock (map check again) ...

...we found it!

Those of us foolish enough to risk our lives climbing up said rock were rewarded with quite the view of Big Bear Lake.

Others decided they were perfectly happy not risking their lives...

..and I perched on the edge.

Sunday morning we took the ski lift up to the top of Snow Summit and had brunch before heading off our separate ways.
